Technology in Law Enforcement

Nunn, Samuel. "Cities, Space, and the New World of Urban Law Enforcement Technologies." Journal of Urban Affairs 23.3&4 (2001): 259-78.

This article is related to my topic because it gives a clear description of the different types of technology our law enforcement uses such as thermal imaging, facial and behavioral recognition systems, remote monitoring by satellite, DNA testing, and retinal scans. The article also explains how each type of them evolved and improved over time. Lastly, the article talks about how new technologies are being discovered as crimes increase.

Southall, Ashley. "Do Body Cameras Help Policing? 1,200 New York Officers Aim to Find Out." The New York Times. The New York Times, 26 Apr. 2017.

Southall describes the new technology of body-worn cameras and how the New York Police Department is planning to put out this technology on all 23,000 officers in the NYPD. The author also describes the impact these cameras will have on both officers and the people. This article also gives different points of view on the use of these cameras and whether they should keep them or not.

Sheldon, Leffler. "Explore Potential For New York Police Department (NYPD) Utilization of Advanced Video And Audio Surveillance Technology," La Guardia And Wagner Archives. N.p., 22 May 1996. Web. 30 Apr. 2017.

This article gives a general idea on the technology of video and audio available to police. This source also explains the different positive effects and the negative impacts of these technologies. Lastly, this article shows the potential of the city to expand these technologies.
